

SENIORS CHOOSE VOCATIONS

Taking up a vocation or life work is a problem that confronts the graduates of every high school. Some go to college; many do not. Sixteen graduates of Bailey High School will soon have to choose which way they will go.

Because of her great interest in journalism, ISABELLE VICK plans to attend Appalachian State Teachers' College to major in English, later continuing this course at some special school of journalism. Her interest in music and voice will lead RELLA PACE to Atlantic Christian College in Wilson where she will take up music. ESTHER FINCH, in beginning to fulfill her ambition to be a stenographer, will attend the Raleigh School of Commerce. In order to make the state healthier, REBA MURRAY, GEORGIA DENTON, and RACHEL BISSETTE plan to go in training to be nurses. RACHEL is undecided where to go, while GEORGIA looks forward to entering Parkview Hospital, Rocky Mount, and REBA, Carolina General at Wilson.

BOYS PREFER FARMING

In the group are six boys who desire remain with the soil. WILBERT MANNING chooses to remain on the farm, but W. S. HIGH, RANDOLPH DEW, ALBERT LAMM, BROOKS HIGH, and THOMAS FINCH will farm this summer and later choose another field; W. S. and RANDOLPH hope to go into business; THOMAS wants to be a skilled carpenter, while BROOKS is undecided about what to do after the first summer of farming; ALBERT expects to be drafted for a year's service in the Army.

VARIETY SHOWN IN CHOICE

PEARL MANNING and EDITH DENTON will remain at home to do whatever comes along. Only one wishes to be a teacher. She is BRUCE VICK whose mind is unsettled as to which college to attend but leans towards E.C.T.C. at Greenville. A lover of the artistic, ROSALIE EARP desires to design dresses, although she is undecided just where to pursue this choice.
