

"Styles Ain't Styles No More"

"Anything can happen" is the motto of the fashion originators in and around Bailey High this year. The current fad is to wear plaid shirts, in or out. More important is that the shoulder seam comes down over the shoulder and the colors are bright. As a result the rural girls better stay away from cow pastures.

Serving in two respects--they can be worn as sweaters over waists or simply as waists--their appeal is making the girls "go-out" for shirts. Envious glances directed at those now being worn signify more plaid shirts sooner or later, probably sooner.

Notice--don't be surprised when boys start wearing ribbons. S. L. P.

Information Please?

At recess any student not desiring to be quizzed by a "bunch" of paper workers had better disappear. Dangling a piece of paper and pencil, the journalism students parade the halls seeking information.

Although many don't approve of being asked thier hobby and similar inquiries, almost everyone will be questioned by the end of the year. It's a case of creating interest in the school paper, not curiosity. F.J.
