

THEME THOUGHTS

CALLING ALL TEACHERS

Repeated thoughts expressed in themes entitled What Students Expect from Their Teachers, tenth grade assignment, are quoted below:

They expect teachers to be attractive and neat in appearance.

Teachers should be considerate of the progress of each individual's mind.

Students desire that their teachers be reasonable and impartial.

Among the desired traits that should be exemplified by teachers are kindness, helpfulness, understanding, fairness, guidance, and pleasantness.

The prerequisite of all requirements is that teachers treat all students alike.

If one student does something wrong, it isn't fair for all students to take the blame.

Every student expects cooperation from the teacher in class activities not necessarily connected with class assignments.

ATTENTION PLEASE

"ATTENTION, PLEASE," came a voice over the sound system. "Will the high school teachers meet in Mrs. Farmer's room this afternoon to average the conduct grades."

No audible remarks from the students, but for once expressions made mind reading easy. If a photographic impression of each face could have been registered at that instant, teachers could have quickly determined conduct grades that afternoon.

Shy looks, fearful looks, sly looks, complacent smiles, peeps from over the books, you're-in-for-it-now nods plainly revealed each one's thoughts of self or fellow students as remembrances of past behavior flashed across the brain.

Later, when report cards were received, the future swallowed up the past as excuses (Next Column)

WHAT'S THE MOTIVE?

Bows to match the hair, bows to match the eyes, bows to match the dress, and bows to catch a beau-- that's what's seen around Bailey high.

Whatever the motive be, it takes more than bows to make the girl. She needs personality, good looks (which many of us don't have), and a ready smile. Oh! I forgot; she needs some common sense, too.

But, girls, don't let anything discourage you about wearing your bows, for they really look cute. B.D. Sanders
