

Self Education May Again Prevail

"Next year, high schools will be composed mainly of girls," states Mr. L. S. Inscoc, county superintendent.

To supply the nation and her fighting men there must be a greater amount of food raised than usual. Realizing this, the government requires boys from thirteen through seventeen to make a number of units, the number depending upon age, or the older brother or father of farm families of draft age will confront the possibility of being drafted.

This means that boys will have to stay at home and turn to radios, varied books, and newspapers for education.

These facts, if none other, should make boys and girls grasp every advantage of these last weeks of school. To some it may be their last contact with a class room.

Old-Fashioned Honor Slowly Deteriorates

As "a tree is known by its fruits" a person is known by his acts.

Copied work, misbehavior when the teacher leaves the classroom, giving one's word without proper backing, and careless misuse of school property are instances of lack of honor evident in Bailey school.

Generally speaking, there is too much of the "just so I can get by with it" attitude. Thoughts of what reputation or character we're building never enter our heads.

Students should wake up to the fact that when a person loses his HONOR he has lost his all.

High School Can Learn From First Graders

Lessons in conduct can be learned by comparing the entrance of the subdued, orderly little first graders into the lunch room with that of the boisterous, push and shove entrance of the high school.

Two by two, they file along, no unnecessary chatter, no needless shuffling of feet, and no loud laughter; while the rudeness of the high school body reveals that the little marks of courtesy are often forgotten as one grows older.

Their splendid behavior should shame us so-called grown ups into more orderly conduct, and until then it would seem quite appropriate if the positions were reversed.

Desks, Not Wastebaskets

1. Don't laugh at a person when he makes a mistake. This shows a lack of consideration for others.
2. Never utter unkind words.
3. Carry your plate to the end table after finishing lunch.
4. Walk softly in the halls and avoid needless shuffling of the feet.
