

Requirements for Prestige In High School

(Sociology Class)

Prestige means social standing, and in high school the standards for prestige are somewhat different from those of the adult world. Almost universally people are evaluated by the money they spend. In our school, money is an asset but not a requirement. We do not choose our leaders because of their wealth but because of their initiative and ability.

ATHLETES

During certain seasons of the year the students in the limelight are our athletes. We recognize their unusual prowess and accord to them the prestige they deserve. Of course, there are other extra-curricular activities besides athletics in which the students may take part, and credit is given for such participation.

The faculty, more so than the student body, sets up scholarship as a requirement for social standing. The student body pays less attention to grades and scholastic standing than to personality and athletic ability.

The students do demand that their classmates be cooperative in class affairs, that they be loyal to their school and fellow students, that they maintain a respectful manner to both teacher and classmates, that they show originality and initiative when they are so talented, and they fall in line with the class.
