After curing, the tobacco is prepared for market by grading or the separating of leaves... This tobacco is packed in bundles of 25 to 50 leaves and hung on sticks... removed from the sticks and placed in boxes... weighed. These boxes are then placed in long rows on the warehouse floors to await bids of purchasers and buyers. The quality of the tobacco determines the price paid by buyers, who are representatives of cigarette companies and tobacco dealers.

Tobacco grown here is principally the cigarette type. Prior to the war, English companies were among the heaviest buyers of this tobacco. Bailey spent most of the year, 1914-1915, but the market was unsuccessful because of the war.
