Behind The Scenes

General Business Class Visits Telegraph Office

BOBBY RAY MEACOMES, a senior, is his father's assistant, although you wouldn't suspect his interest in anything termed work. He helps milk the cow and feed the other animals on his father's farm. This job seems to fit Bobby Ray very well, for he is quite frequently heard boasting about his farm animals.

VURGIA LEE STRICKLAND'S home chore is helping with the ironing. That she does her work well is obvious by the 4,1 neatly pressed clothes she wears.

"Rumors are flying" that humorous BILLY MURRAY is an especially good jitterbugger. We should have guessed that by the light, nimble-footed steps we see Billy making when prancing from one class to another.

Bicycling is a special sport with the ROOKER SIS-TERS; in fact it is such a favorite that DOROTHY ANN, a sophomore, spends her spare time youngsters to ride her bike.

Following up their study of all forms of telegrams, the general business class visited the telegraph office last week for first hand information and de-

Mr. Roy Watson, Bailey railroad agent, explained the method of telegraphy. He demonstrated the Morse code in slow motion for the benefit of the stu-lieve the tension of bus driving by riding their lovely white and black pony, which they prize highly.

They were told the stations that were being called at that time and how to recognize Bailey's call. They were informed by Mr. Watson that no message is received with any misspelled words.

All telegrams are typed as they are received and a copy of each must be kept for a year for reference.

Rates, the number words, and time limits were discussed for regular telegrams, day letters, and night letters. Mr. Watson explained that
