

Behind The Scenes

We predict that Sue Lassiter, junior, will go a long way in life if cleverness and diplomacy carry weight. Limited by her mother in the number of dates that she could have a week, Sue quietly went around making a survey of the number of dates other girls have. This list she presented to her mother as proof that she was being denied special privileges. We haven't as yet learned which one was the victor in the "Battle of Wits and Dates."

Anyone lost a pencil? If so just look on Mrs. Howard Farmer's desk and there it will be. In violation of the rule that she always preaches - don't borrow pencils - Mrs. Farmer, English teacher, spends her spare time "snitching" pencils. When anyone comes to her desk for assistance, she will take his pencil to make corrections and forget to return it. Her excuse is absent-mindedness.

Having had six months of music, Mildred Finch found herself without a teacher when Mrs. Jim Murray moved to New York. Undaunted, Mildred continues to practice and finds that she can play for friends who visit her home or for school parties.

Dorothy Joyner's five-year-old sister, Nancy, becomes a recipient of one of the Heart's Desire gifts.

Nancy, afflicted with arthritis, is unable to walk at times. Her mother wrote the program asking for a small wagon for Nancy. Not only was the request granted, but Nancy is to receive a doll also.

Ninth Eng. Class Writes Three-Page Life Stories

To climax their unit on theme writing, the ninth grade English class wrote three-page autobiographies. Originality and cleverness were points stressed by their teacher, Miss Wilma Johnson.

Miss Johnson views the results of their work as "quite entertaining reading, especially the titles and introductory paragraphs."

Some of the titles were "From Infancy to Adolescence", "Mama's Little Girl Grows Up", "The Story of a Future Doctor", "A Farm Boy Grows Up", and "The History of William Lenzie Morgan".
