'Tis The Little Things That Add The Spice'

In a party of 15, travel-bound, there are always amusing and embarrassing happenings. The staff's trip to New York was no exception. Everything from being mistaken for runaways to leaving a suitcase at home took place.

SUITCASE

As the journalism students were nearing Weldon, North Carolina, on the morning that started their journey to New York, Mrs. Laurine Lassiter gave a little scream and asked if her suitcase was in the car. Immediately after finding it wasn't there, she phoned A. H. Farmer to bring it the next day. Mr. Farmer was only too glad to join the group in New York. So ended the suitcase worries.

WATCH

"Barbara can you tell what time it is by my watch? My eyes must be playing tricks on me. I can't even see the hands or the numbers," declared Mrs. A. H. Farmer.

"Well," stated Barbara,

"Maybe if you would turn your watch around it might help you tell time better."

Contrary to the general belief, it was the adults who were more excited than the teen-agers.

BEDLOE ISLAND

After a general tour had been made of the Statue of Liberty, three of the students decided they would walk down the ten flights of stairs. The others took the elevator. They had been told that the ferry would leave them if they walked, but they still wanted to try the stairs. As the stepwalkers came on the pier, the ferry was leaving the dock. The girls might have made it, but the second flight of stairs from the bottom was barricaded, necessitating walking back up. These students should never forget Bedloe Island or the Statue of Liberty, as that experience caused them to miss the convention luncheon in the Astor Hotel Ballroom, one of the highlights of the trip.
