GEOG. CLASS COMPILE REPORTS ON N.C.

That the students might understand the topography, resources, exports and imports, educational rating, health, and transportation was the motive of the commercial geography teacher for requiring the class to prepare a 1000 word theme on North Carolina.

After a five-day research and study the reports were organized and written.

"Most of the reports showed clear thinking, organization, and much effort," states Mrs. Laurine Lassiter, teacher. "The reports of Jacqueline Collic, Millard Morgan, Jackie Edwards, Bobby Glover, and Ben Etheridge deserve honorable mention."

Typing II Design Christmas Cards

That second year typing students might learn that artistic designs as well as straight typing can be done on the typewriter was the purpose of having the students make Christmas cards on the typewriter.

The designs, as nearly original as possible, were first drawn on paper and then typed on the stencil. Pictures that couldn't be made on the typewriter were drawn on the mimeoscope. Afterwards the cards were mimeographed in Christmas colors.

"Some students' cards were so attractive that they plan to use them for Christmas," states Mrs. Laurine Lassiter, instructor.

General Business Class Visits Post Office; Postmistress Explains Regulations

Climaxing the unit on Mail the general business class visited the local postoffice. Mrs. Claiborne Glover, assistant postmistress, explained in detail mailing regulations that all people should know.

Mrs. Glover discussed different classes of mail, postage required for unsealed first-class mail (as Christmas cards), and the filling out of applications for postal money orders, registered mail, and parcel post packages.

At the conclusion of the explanation members of the class asked questions regarding postal requirements.

"If we could educate the public to certain postal regulations," states Mrs. Glover, "our work would be easier."

Judging from examples brought to class, Mrs. Lassiter states, "The students are more observant."
