

Control of Ones Self Needed For Better Conduct

The way a person behaves reveals his character in part. Ever since school began, Mr. Weaver has been pleading with the students to control the unnecessary noises in the halls between classes and at lunch. From all indications his request has gone unheeded.

"The loud laugh bespeaks a vacant mind." It is not necessary to converse so loudly that your conversation will be heard at the far end of the hall. The person to whom you are speaking would, no doubt, prefer to have you speak in a natural, controlled tone rather than to be conspicuous in his presence. It only indicates an inferiority complex on the speaker's part.

When having recess, the grade students passing down the hall and playing on the grounds need to be more considerate of the upper grades in class. The same applies to the high school in regard to the grammar grades.

All that is needed to remedy this situation is that everyone control first himself. Suppose we give the idea a try.

Letter To The Editor

This month the Bugle begins an Open Forum Column to which subscribers or parents may contribute articles. The articles must be limited from 125 to 150 words. The editor reserves the right to determine the number and type of articles published.

Wonder what tomorrow will put in the minds of the teen-agers! It would be no proposition for us parents to send our children to school, if, for one day, we could get one person to wear something like our girls have to wear. My girls may not want to wear a dress because it is a little short or getting old; but should they see someone wearing an old dress with a new big sash or even a big gold safety pin added to it, even though it were shorter than usual, they wouldn't mind wearing theirs. Name The Person

Understanding, possessing a sense of loyalty, humor, and leadership ability are a few of the many admirable traits of this month's character. From observation this person's leisure moments are spent studying others.

Again this month the first person who correctly identifies this character to the editor will be given a free subscription of the Bugle for the remaining of the year to be sent any person desired.

Last month's character, Rodney Pearson, senior, was identified by Mary Ann Edwards.

fact, the very next day there would come dozens dressed the same way, as near as possible, because they think, "Now that's the style"--and the teen-ager must be in style.

Numerous compliments have been paid Maxine Brantley, sophomore, because of her friendliness.

"The people who come to Bailey school are very friendly," quotes a new student, Betty Lou Glover.

Jerry Perry, freshman, is "one of the best treasurers I've ever had because of his promptness, accuracy, and dependability in keeping up with the class money," declares Mrs. Howard Farmer, freshman sponsor.

After the chapel program presented by the fourth grade, numerous compliments were paid Jasper Horton's and Gwen Burgess's singing as well as that of the entire program.
