

About the middle of July, 1913, Bailey saw a happy young bride and groom come into town and establish a small furniture business. That couple was Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Christian.

Later as the little business prospered and grew, the Christians moved from the "Old Joe Dew" building to the building now occupied by Johnson's Market; still later to the building they now occupy.

"Of course, it has not been all peaches and cream," says Mrs. Christian, but we have remained here to be of service to the community."

Now in their fortieth year and being one of Bailey's oldest firms, Mrs. Christian declares she is here to stay and "wants all to--
