THANKSGIVING SEASON HERE

The Thanksgiving season is here again. Let us stop and take note of the many things we have for which we can be thankful. We can begin on a very personal level and count the blessings there. We can be thankful for life, health, strength, happiness. As life expectancy continues to increase, we have more years that we can use in training in order that we might do a better job in adult life. The medical profession has done such an outstanding job in helping us to be healthy that poor health is the exception rather than the rule. We need to appreciate good health and to guard it zealously. We should be thankful for an average mind. Use it, train it, discipline it.

OUR HOMES

We can be thankful for our homes. The parents in the home supply us with our physical needs. Food, clothing, and shelter are necessary. They are appreciated when they are received. The home, however, has other functions which are as important as the satisfying of physical needs, or maybe more important. The parents should set an example. They should be honest, truthful, sober, reverent, law abiding people. They should know the right thing to do and do it. They should make the child feel secure. They should give the child a feeling of belonging; a feeling that he is loved; a feeling that he is really an important person. If young people have parents who minister to their physical, moral, social, and spiritual needs (most of them do), then they can really be thankful this year and every year.

As your list grows longer, don't forget to be thankful for your school, your church, your friends, your playmates.

FOR AMERICA

Take a long pause and be grateful that you are an American. Honor your country and its flag. Hold up its standards and its ideals. Support its institutions with your self, your services, your money. Honor its glorious past; take pride in its illustrious present; and hope for it a wonderful future.

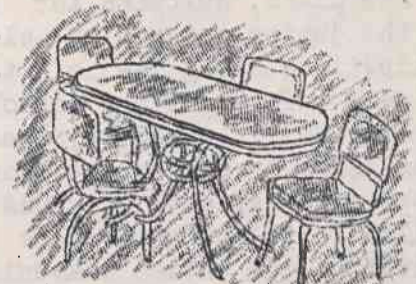

MAY WE BE TRULY AND HUMBLY THANKFUL AT THIS 1953 THANKSGIVING SEASON.

THANKS

May I take this opportunity to thank each patron, teacher, and student for everything each has done, big or small, to make our school a better school.

Winners of the "Miss Popularity" contest were Wanda High, high school; Delores Johnson, elementary grades; and Betsy May, primary grades. They were crowned in the auditorium at the end of the Halloween Carnival program.
