

Miss Oglesby Doesn't Stop Because It's Work

Mix youthfulness, energy, ambition, and industriousness and the result is a driving force. This might be said to be a true picture of Idalia Oglesby, student, teacher, and librarian.

A HELPING HAND

Youthfulness could have something to do with the willingness Miss Oglesby shows when called upon to help others or even in helping herself. When she sets a goal, she usually reaches it--proof that "where there's a will there's a way."

Serving as school librarian and junior sponsor, the latter of which includes raising funds for the class's activities, staging the banquet, and directing a junior play, reveals Miss Oglesby has energy to do anything.

OTHER QUALITIES

Ambition is another excellent quality seen in Miss Oglesby. She's now working for her Master's Degree, which she will receive in August. To make this possible, she has had to be both student and teacher this fall and winter.

In addition to her regular teaching, she has taken three courses at East Carolina College and one at Nashville this year.

She's getting her degree in Administration and Secondary Education with a teaching certificate in English and Social Studies.

She's proof that "It's the busy person who gets things done."

Class Colors Determine Cap-Gown Selection

Red and white, the class colors, and the red rose, the class flower, were the deciding factors last week in the seniors' choice of their caps and gowns.

With these colors in mind, the class voted to have white caps and gowns with red and white tassels, and red and white stoles for the valedictorian and salutatorian.

At the same meeting the seniors selected their invitations and individual calling cards.
