semester with the study of George Eliot's novel, Silas Marner. This study will include both silent and oral reading, followed by class discussions of the story and the author's style of writing. Writing themes and character sketches and the drawing of maps of Raveloe will accompany the study of Silas Marner.

With the "dreaded" mid-term exams over, the United States History class will begin a thorough study of the Civil War, the teacher points out, including the factors leading up to the war as well as the result and effects of the war on both the North and South. To accompany this study will be map studies, oral reports, and class discussions.

that this donation, which otherwise would have gone into the class treasury, showed "good" citizenship. The junior are also donating individually to what they consider a "very needy" cause.
