

St. Press Encourages Article

"Lack of interest in highlighting the actual class work" in school papers was pointed out at the State Press Convention this fall. In keeping with this suggested idea, the staff has endeavored to present from time to time the work under study in the various departments.

NORTH CAROLINA LITERATURE

The juniors in their study of American Literature have just completed a unit dealing with North Carolina authors and their works.

As there was no unit on North Carolina in the textbook, the class, according to the teacher's report, had to work out its unit.

AUTHORS

The study has included leading North Carolina authors, past and present, and a brief resumé of numerous others. The students gathered data for their reports wherever possible, but literary productions were taken up on class.

The boys by drawing sketches and making posters brought the reports and studies to life. In charge of the artistic work were Mack Burgess, Ray Fulghum, Henry Brantley, Wesley Medlin, Raymond Boykin, Billy Ruffin, Bobby Turnage, and Charles Rhodes.

During the study of this unit each student was challenged to try his hand at creative writing.
