

School Work Requires Extra Hours For All

Almost any afternoon, long after the 3:15 dismissal bell has sounded, one can find students and teachers at school working on various activities, to which fact any after-school worker can testify.

As the commercial department has only one adding machine, many students remain after school to complete jobs in the adding machine course.

Ball Practice

Basketball practice demands students' and coach's afternoon and evening hours.

Many of the teachers may be found at school late using the ditto duplicator, working on projects, or rearranging black-board and bulletin board work for the next day's assignments.

Piano Students

In order to get piano lessons the following students had to register for after-school hours: Louise Watson, Nancy Finch, Rachel Farmer, Margaret Glover, Barbara Sue Lamm, and Sandra Stott. Connie Lamm and Mary Elizabeth Glover get their lessons before the morning-opening hours. The other 26 students are able to take music during school hours.

Program Rehearsals

It is not unusual in the afternoons to find students with their teacher practicing for a program.

Journalism students who are behind on required work or need help remain after school to complete assignments; others continue working in order to get the BUGLE out on time.

Jobs that are incomplete require agriculture boys to stay and work on them. Others stay to get help from their teacher, John H. Wells.
