Highlights Of Ag. Dept.

Practice teachers, Bill Brown and Clarence Harris, completed their eleven weeks of practice teaching at Bailey, January 18.

"Both men were above average in popularity with their classes as well with their quality of work", states Adviser Wells. They are to graduate from North Carolina State College in June.

Tommy Glover, graduate of Bailey High School, finished his practice teaching at South Edgecombe this term. Graduating from North Carolina State College January 24, he will become a teacher of agriculture at Rich Square, January 28.

With an adult class of 27 farmers, Adviser Wells engaged in 90 hours of instruction work last year. This included field trips and class room work.

STUDENTS GIVE SUPPER

As a token of appreciation for the cooperation shown in helping them supplement their treasury, chapter members entertained the "calendar advertisers" with a supper in the agriculture building earlier this month.

Approximately fifteen merchants and businessmen who advertised in the FFA calendar were present at the supper.

The menu consisted of barbeque chicken, bread and pepsi-colas.

Study Begins For Contest

Study for the tool identification to take place at Dillion Supply Company in Rocky Mount February 18 has begun for ninth grade ag. students.

There is about 225 tools and materials to be learned. They include metal and wood working tools, covering electrical devices also.

Students from the ninth grade are the only ones eligible. Four members from the ninth grade ag. class will compose the team.

AG. TEAM CAPTURES FIFTH PLACE

Four Ag. members, representing Bailey in the Nash-Edgecombe Federation Seed Judging Contest, placed fifth in competition with ten other teams last month at Gold Rock, North Carolina.

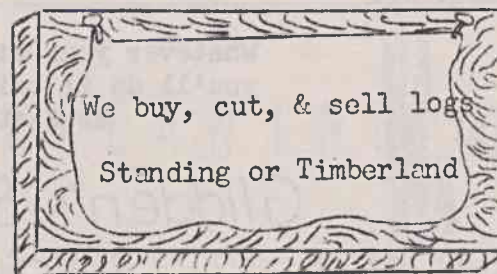

The boys prepared for the contest by studying different types of grain, grasses, and weeds. In all there were about 125 different varieties of seed.

Although the team placed fifth, it was the highest score made by any Bailey team in the last several years.

Members on the team were Dallas Glover, Dale Wells, Jimmy Dew, and Charles Williams.
