Screen Version of Silas Marner Planned

Lights! Action! Camera! In the not very distant future these words will resound on the locations which the third and fourth period sophomore English classes, taught by Miss Clara Downing, have chosen for scenes in their motion picture, Silas Marner, to be cast next fall.

The classes have already done a considerable amount of work. First they read and discussed the book. Next they chose a scenery committee with Edward Little and Lois Rogers, chairmen, to select the scenes and write the script.

Auditorium Formally Opened In 1932; Curtains Given By Class of '33

In January 1927, classes were held in the present Goldsboro High School building for the first time. Since that time quite a number of improvements have been made.

Due to the lack of funds when the building was constructed, the auditorium was not completely finished until 1937.

In 1932, the walls were plastered, stage completed, seats put in, and the auditorium partially lighted.

During their Junior year, the class of '33 took the major part of their funds from their Junior play and presented as their class gift, the red velvet curtains which still hang in the auditorium. These curtains were made by the girls in the sewing department under the direction of Miss Koch.

Now, in 1937, the tenth anniversary year, the Goldsboro Board of Trustee has given a $600 system of practical lighting for use in the auditorium.

The system includes six 1,000 watt bulbs, three 300 watt bulbs, six chandeliers, and nine shades.

During the coming summer 7 new rooms will be added, following up the original plan, and will be ready for occupancy at the beginning of school next year.

The original plan was to extend the building at both east and west wings and then connect them. This would make the heating plant be inside of the enclosure.

The manual training, printing, English, science, mechanical drawing, commercial, and history students will use the new rooms.

Mr. A. J. Maxwell is the architect.

NINE ENTER N. H. S. IN SECOND TAPPING

Character, Leadership, And Service Explained By Reverend Ball

Six juniors, Helen Moyer, Jean Edgerton, Ross Ward, James Heyward, Jack Wharton, James Crone and three seniors, James Zealy, Katherine Jones, and Irene Mitcham were tapped into the National Honor Society May 19 in an open ceremony in the high school auditorium.

Beginning the program, Jane Smith, chairman, introduced Reverend W. C. Ball, who gave a short talk on the importance of living up to the high standards of the society, which are scholarship, character, leadership, and service.

After Reverend Ball's speech, Marshall McDowell explained the Honor Society emblem, which consists of the keystone and the flame

First Freshman Day Observed In G.H.S.

The first "Freshman Day" ever to be held in Goldsboro High School was carried out Wednesday.

Two hundred and fifty incoming freshmen toured the building in small groups and learned from student guides the plan and the manner in which high school classes are conducted.

Three classes, Mrs. Hawley's, Mrs. Bizzell's, and Miss Moore's came over at the first of school and were given short explanations of the school and its activities by Mr. Johnson and several activity representatives.

Mr. Johnson told them about the registration for courses of study; William Dees, about Student Association; Helen Moyer, school spirit; James Zealy, Athletics; Olivia Ferguson, Cafeteria; Irene Mitcham, Courtesy; Nancy Pipkin, the Hi News; and "Babe" Baddour, Honors.

After getting a general idea of the activities of the school, they were shown over the building by student guides. Having observed the main points of high school life, they were assembled at the regular time with the student body to witness the tapping of the National Honor Society.

The other three classes, Miss Judd's, Miss Hendericks', and Miss Barclay's, came over in time for the assembly program. After the assembly program the first group returned to their classes, and the second group followed practically the same schedule as the first group.
