Junior Psychs Invade Wesleyan

Mrs. Beth Biggerstaff's Psychology classes took a field trip to North Carolina Wesleyan College on October 8 and 9. The classes had been studying patterns of learning and at Wesleyan, the students were shown machines and different types of instruments that professional psychologists use. Mr. Ray Brackett and Dr. Jane Raney, psychology professors at Wesleyan, explained the seminar. According to one student, the trip proved to be very interesting and enjoyable.

The students left school and rode to Wesleyan. The session lasted over to their next class, but most of the students said that the trip was worth it.

Students Explore Stone Age Life

Mr. Van Cutt's World History Survey classes have recently completed a study of early man. The classes investigated the lifestyles of man during Paleolithic times and then compared and contrasted that with life of man during Neolithic times.

The classes constructed and then displayed both a Paleolithic and Neolithic setting in the library show cases to depict the nature of their study.

During the Paleolithic times, better known as the Old Stone Age, man was a food gatherer. He made relatively effective stone tools and/or weapons. He also lived in painted caves.

Neolithic times are better known as the New Stone Age wherein man used wheels, houses were made of sticks and straws, and man used nets and canoes to fish with. They were village dwellers and made precise tools.
