HIGHLANDS LITTLE THEATRE TO PRESENT
PLAY MONDAY NIGHT

The Highlands Little Theatre will present its first play, Dulcy, by George Kauffman and Marc Connelly, Tuesday night August 29th, at the school theatre.

The cast is made up of people who have had considerable stage experience, and of others who are appearing on the stage for the first time. They are:

Anne Altstaetter, Frank Lowman, Tony Moore, Jack H. Wilcox, Tom Fitz-Patrick, Polly Raoul, Margaret Rankin, Edgar Neely, Jr., Herbert C. Milkey, Sarah Bridges Thompson, and Henry Zoellner.

The Little Theatre group, which hopes to include others not already aligned with it, is anxious to promote enough enthusiasm and interest this summer to carry over for a full season next year, with productions at regular intervals.

Dulcy is a light comedy, the story of a young wife who insists on carrying out her well-meaning, but flighty and often disastrous, notions of helping her husband in business. The play is directed by Tom Fitz-Patrick, Associate Professor of Architecture, Clemson College, who is a charter member and director of the Clemson Little Theatre.

Tickets will be on sale from Friday through Monday at Highlands Drug Store. Reserved seats are fifty cents and general admission thirty-five cents.

Miss Dana Gatchell, head of the Home Economics Department at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, at Auburn, Ala., is a guest at Tricemont Terrace. Miss Gatchell has made scores of friends during the summers she has been vacationing in Highlands.
