Meredith Dance Repertory

by Ann Stringfield

For some, modern dance is a difficult art to grasp. More than ballet, it is subject to the individual dancer's interpretation. For example, a plie is a more definite sort of thing than being a tree. Modern dance is an unusual artistic medium.

In keeping with modern dance, the fall dance concert of the Meredith Dance Repertory Ensemble was unusual. The concert consisted of three dances: Sport Illusions, Appalachian Springtime and Ragged Leggins.

Sport Illusions is a dance choreographed by ensemble director Deborah Whelan. The ensemble interpreted such sports as swimming, skiing and golf. The piece was very appropriately accompanied by variations on the music of Joplin, Debussy and Bartok.

Appalachian Springtime, choreographed and danced by ensemble member Donna Daughtry, is a piece of sensitivity and simplicity. It is a good effort at capturing the spirit and personality of the mountains.

Spirit and personality are also prevalent in Ragged Leggins, a piece choreographed by Jack and Jennifer Arnold. This dance has much movement and humor. It is a dance in which the capabilities of the individual dancers can be seen. Correspondingly, Deborah Whelan and Susanna Beggs were the outstanding dancers in this number, both possessing great stage presence.

Overall, the concert was a good effort and an interesting experience for the audience.
