

O'Callahan to speak at convocation

It is not an exaggeration to express the captivity a story teller such as Jay O'Callahan from Marshfield, Mass., has over his audience. The art of storytelling is a kind of music, believes O'Callahan, that explores the depths of expression and oneness. The storyteller forms a sense of oneness with the story, becoming the story, then sharing his creation with the audience.

O'Callahan has the capacity to perform his own stories with sensitivity and beauty. We, at Meredith, will have the opportunity to be Jay O'Callahan's audience as he presents "A Special Kind of Theater."

He will perform his own stories on October 10 at 10:00 A.M. in Jones Auditorium. He has performed in Europe, Africa, and Canada, as well as across the United States. Mark your calendar for this uplifting convocation.

Jay O'Callahan, a master storyteller, will speak at convocation Monday, October 10, at 10 a.m.

Honor Society inducts

Meredith's Phi Omricon chapter of Phi Alpha Theta had its fall induction on Wednesday, September 21, 1983. The four new members who were tapped in during a candlelight ceremony are Pam Admas, Lisa Bailey, Beth Caviness and Elaine Jolly.

Phi Alpha Theta is a national history honor society. To be eligible for membership, a student must have at least 12 hours in history courses with a grade point average for those courses above 3.0 and an overall academic average of 3.0 or more. The Phi Omricon Chapter at Meredith welcomes its new members and encourages any student with an interest in history to work hard in their courses so their courses so the chapter can have more new members for the spring 1984 inductions.

Bribes offered for pics of Brooke

PRINCETON, NJ (CPS) - Princeton University officials and students have been offered bribes and other inducements for helping reporters photograph or talk to its most famous new freshman, actress Brooke Shields.

Several national magazines reportedly offered as much as $500 for a candid shot of Shields, the model and star of teen movies like "The Blue Lagoon" and "Endless Love," as she went through orientation at Princeton last week, according to George Eager, the school's communications director.

One undergraduate was reportedly told to name his price if he could get a picture of the 18-year-old celebrity naked.

But during orientation week campus security guards managed to turn away most of the hordes of autograph seekers and journalists who descended on campus.

Princeton isn't the only school contending with the unusual problems of protecting celebrity students this fall.

Actresses Jodi Foster and "Flashdance" star Jennifer Beals are both back at Yale this term, but the university won't comment on what, if any, extra security arrangements it's made for the women, spokesman Walter Littell says.

They present, however, fairly new problems.

"The kinds of celebrity students we have previously (enrolled) have been children of royal families and children of famous parents," Eager observes. "You could walk right by them and never know it."

With students like Shields, Foster, and Beals, "the situation is more complicated because she is a star in her own right, and almost instantly recognizable."

Recent Princeton alumni include members of the Saudi royal family, actor Gregory Peck's daughter, and the daughter of Phillipine President Ferdinand Marcos.

The more-recognizable John F. Kennedy, Jr., son of the late president, graduated from Brown last spring without attracting much outside interest.

Getting them through school successfully means "respecting the student's privacy," Littell says.

Toward that end, Princeton security guards will be watching for journalists even after the initial week of school, will screen Shields' mail, and try to prevent outsiders from gaining access to the actress through her roommates and friends, Eager says.

"She just wants to be a normal student," he adds, "and we will do everything we can to see that she has that right."

Huber speaks on residency

Dr. Jack Huber, the Chairman of the Psychology Department at Meredith, spoke at the Psi Chi Colloquium on Tuesday, September 20. The title of his lecture was "My Year as a Resident in Clinical Psychology."

Dr. Huber compared his residency to "a cool pond; a place to drink in and grow." Dr. Huber did his residency at the School of Pastoral Care at Baptist Hospital in Winston-Salem, NC. His clients ranged anywhere from 10 to 78 years old.

Dr. Huber attended weekly sessions, and also had to go through therapy. He also had to attend seminars bi-weekly where everyone shared papers, and attended group sessions once a week. Dr. Huber expressed feelings of joy, pain and discovery while he was away. Dr. Huber commented that, "As Adler said, 'the hardest tasks in life were love, occupation, and community,' Huber says that combined love was the hardest."
