

News Briefs

IBM announced Tuesday plans to sell its South African subsidiary, becoming the second major U.S. corporation in two days to pull out of business in the racial strife-torn country. General Motors Corp. was the first.

International Business Machines Corp., the biggest computer company, said the worsening economic and political climate prompted its decision to sell IBM South Africa to local interests.

A statement made Tuesday by the Revolutionary Justice Organization in Beirut said it had abducted Edward Austin Tracy, 55, of Rutland, VT., one of the few Americans who stayed in the west Beirut area despite the seizure of over 60 foreigners there since January 1984. Tracy is a well-known Beirut character and writes children's books and poetry. He is among seven Americans who are still missing in Lebanon.

Television evangelist Pat Robinson filed twin $35 million libel suits against former Rep. Paul McCloskey and Rep. Andrew Jacobs, D-Ind., over claims Robertson used his father's influence to avoid combat duty in Korea.

Robertson charged McCloskey and Jacobs of making "wanton and reckless statements denigrating my role with the U.S. Marine Corps while serving in the Korean conflict." Robertson is a Republican presidential prospect in 1988.

A man in Daytona Beach, Fla. gave his 3-year-old daughter to a suspected drug dealer as collateral for $40 worth of marijuana. Floyd W. Cook, 35, was charged Wednesday with the sale and delivery of marijuana. Cook gave his daughter to the drug dealer, who took her inside his motel room while Cook returned to his car. Four minutes later, Cook returned, gave the man $40 and got his child back. Cook told an undercover officer the swap was "just business."
