Connells entertain fans with "Fun and Games"

by: Marlea Doane

The Connells turned the Raleigh Civic Center "Upside Down" as they sang to a nearly full house on September 22.

Raleigh fans were more than ready to reunite with this hometown band for their only Raleigh show this year.

The Connells spent their summer on tour around the U.S. to promote their first album to receive national attention, "Fun and Games."

Even though they have received a lot of attention nationwide, they still seemed like the boys next door.

Guitarist Mike Connell smiled demurely at the crowd as lead singer Doug MacMillan (known to be quite a ham) slimked across the stage and entertained the audience by tossing back a glow-in-the-dark Frisbee.

"I'll take it home and add it to my collection of glow-in-the-dark things." MacMillan said as the Frisbee soared back onto the stage. (He also made sure to show the audience his glow-in-the-dark tambourine).

Singer/Guitarist George Huntley surprisingly had cut his shoulder-length hair causing the audience to wonder if it was the same person.

During the two-hour show the band played songs from all three of their albums, but focused on their later two, "Boylan Heights" and "Fun and Games."

After the second encore ended with David Connell's favorite "Hey Wow," the audience figured the show was over, but Huntley gently brought the excited crowd back down as he topped off the evening with a particularly heartfelt version of his own "Lay Me Down."

Artwork on Display in Johnson Hall

by: Susan Cartrette

Through October 20, the Johnson Hall rotunda will house works by Nancy A. Lloyd and Horace L. Farlowe.

Lloyd's watercolors are impressive as she uses lines and bands of color to convey movement and dimension. The mostly pastel oranges and yellows are broken by streaks of primary colors. She also uses white to intrude, especially in "Stormy Italian Skies."

Farlowe's sculptures are characterized by spatial openings and roundness. His "Painted Spanish Black Marble" is appealing with its facial qualities of a protruding jaw and an eye.
