Student Expression at the 2014 DanceWorks

Fantasia Evans, staff writer

DanceWorks was performed in the Jones Auditorium Friday, April 11 until Sunday, April 13. Saturday and Sunday were split between programs A and B of which showcased Meredith College dancers. Sunday was the Gala program which featured specifically chosen dances from programs A and B. The event seemed to be a success with Meredith students, staff, faculty, and community coming together to experience and support Meredith College Dancers. The performances varied and were expressed in many different types of dance. Each had meanings of their own and was presenting some sort of message through movement or was simply fun and exciting to view.

The dances were choreographed and performed by Meredith College students and faculty. One piece in particular that had a clear message intended for the audience was featured in Program A choreographed by Junior Dance Education Major, Megan Motley who stated, "My piece, 'The Only Way' was definitely inspired by my beliefs and everyday life experiences and how I feel peace can be brought to the world. It was inspired by Ephesians 4." She as well as many of the other artists used life experiences and ideas to be expressed and presented through the movements of the dancers. Senior Dance

Studies Major Tequila Reid discussed her piece titled "Words Attach, Never Reflect (Imperfections)" as a therapeutic process for her dancers. Reid's dancers wrote in notebooks how they felt about themselves and created movements from these words. Reid then choreographed the movements into a dance. DanceWorks was important for choreographers, dancers, and audience alike to experience movement, meaning, and the importance of dance for all people. Even if one wasn't on stage at DanceWorks it was clear to see the passion, thought, importance, and effort shine through the dancers and their created works.

Library Party Movie Picks

Katy Koop, staff writer

Now that finals are here, the time for procrastination has arrived more than ever. Now with all the papers piling up there's ample time to do just anything but that- There's scrolling down tumblr for five hours, making elaborate microwave desserts, cleaning every inch of the bathroom, and of course binge watching movies and T.V. shows. Here are some feel good picks from the Meredith Library that might fill that need:

No.1 Ladies Detective Agency: It is a shame that this T.V. show only had one season on HBO. It is the ultimate feel good that a sad student can pop in the dark time between 3 am and 5 am. It takes the concept of a detective agency out of cold male dominated London and takes it to warm and colorful Botswana, with two women solving crimes in their village because they want to take justice into their own hands, also with tea in hand. Whether it is solving crimes about missing husbands, ivory smugglings or car jackings- this show is sure to become everyone's number one.

Chicago: Some nights need a little more karaoke than most. Chicago is just the movie for that- singing "He had it comin'" while writing an essay, "And we both reached for the gun" while diagramming note cards, "Give em' the old razzle dazle" while putting the finishing touches on that presentation and any Meredith girl can feel like the star that Roxy wants to be. There's singing, dancing, and of course murder- it is the perfect choice for exam level catharsis.

Midnight in Paris: English Majors of all people need to see this movie. Even if not, even if just a person that loves the twenties or the sass of Hemingway, or just people that like to be happy- now is the time for this movie. It is Woody Allen at his feel best. Many critics have called his movies love letters to different cities and this movie is a love letter to Paris, to art and Literature, and every depressed student writing a never ending paper. Pop this movie in, get a pep talk from Hemingway and "if baby I'm the bottom, you're the top!"
