

Photo by Dan Law

Tessa, Lucy and Ava Sweet, along with Clara and Dane Freeman, put boogie boards to good use.

Photo by Dan Law

Photo by Dan Law

Nick and Victoria Berry get out to enjoy the winter scenery before it's gone.

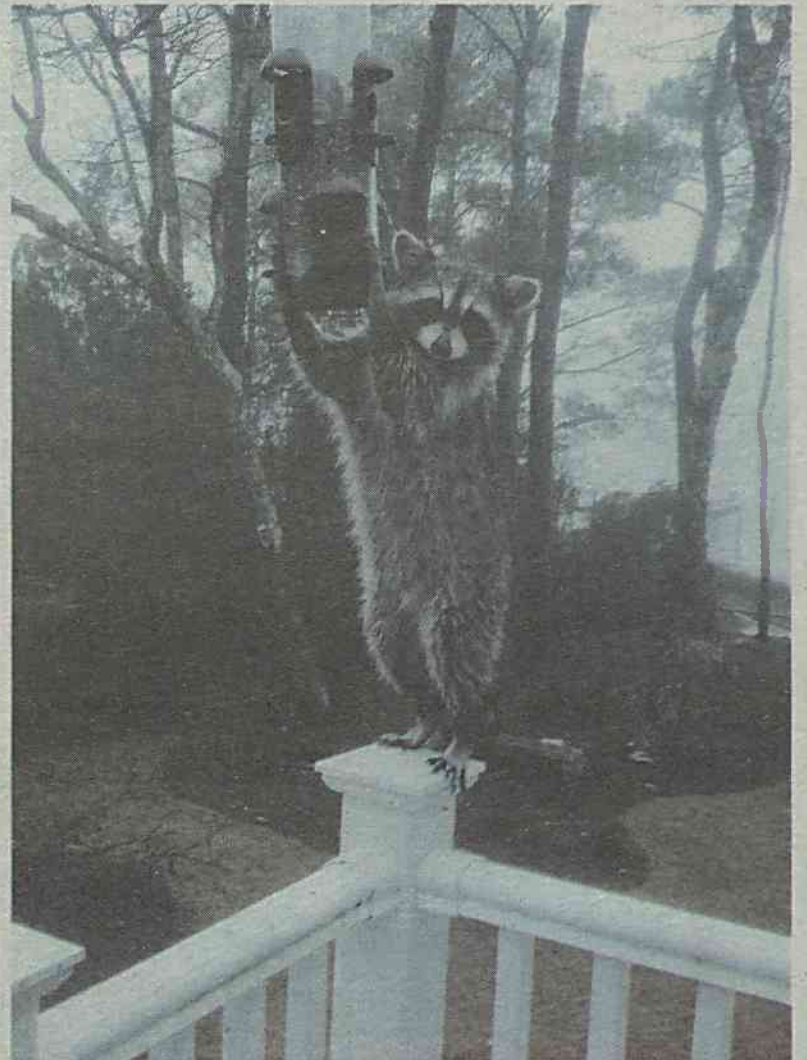

Photo by Linda Smith

The ocean eats away at the snow- and ice-covered frozen sand.

Photo by Richard Seale

In early February large flocks of Robins and Cedar Waxwings were flying through Pine Knoll Shores. As the photo shows, the waxwings are incredibly beautiful and "precisely" colored birds. They eat the seeds of the cedar trees, so our town with its many cedar trees is a favored spot to feed. Based on a tip from bird lovers Donna and Dick Belanger that waxwings love a supply of fresh unfrozen water, simple pie plates of water were put out to attract these birds. The red on the wing tips is indeed a form of wax, so they are properly named!
—Richard Seale

This little fellow risked life and limb to share the birdseed on Linda Smith's second story deck—and boldly posed for a picture!