Oldest Employee

P. F. Grogan his first public work with the contractor who built Nantucket Mills.

He helped install the first machinery in the dye house and to put up the shafting. In 1899 he took charge of the steam plant and continued as engineer until electric power was installed. He then began work with the shop crew, being in charge of the humidifying system and motors.

On May 31, 1942, Mr. Grogan completed his 44th year with Marshall Field & Co., and during all these years he missed very few days from his work.

In 1901 he was married to Miss Lucy Hayden. Their home has been blessed by the presence of three children, Mrs. Walter Hudnall, Mrs. James Curry and James Grogan.

Appropriately enough, Mr. Grogan is now watchman in the plant (formerly known as Nantucket Mills) he himself helped to build. Speaking of his work and long service to the company, Mr. Grogan remarked: "I never cared to rove about like some people." And he feels that he has lost nothing by following this inclination.
