

UNSAFE CLOTHING CAN CAUSE ACCIDENTS

No matter how carefully machines are guarded or how well a plant is maintained, injuries can occur because individuals wear unsafe clothing. Women's long hair may become entangled in machinery or men's loose neckties or dangling shirt sleeves may get caught in moving parts. Shirts that blouse too much or which have torn pockets may be grabbed by a machine or a torn pants leg might get caught.

Tripping might be caused by pants that are too long or which have torn cuffs. Foot injuries may result from the wrong type of shoes or footwear that has been mutilated or that is in poor repair. Of course, safety shoes furnish the best protection. Many falls occur because of high heel shoes. Shoes with wooden or leather heels slip easily, and may cause an individual to suffer a painful fall.

On some jobs ordinary clothing does not provide sufficient protection and special types of clothing are needed. For example, in a dyehouse rubber aprons are needed for protection against excessive water and as a safeguard against acid splashes. Boot shoes are needed on the wet floors. Rubber gloves afford protection to the hands and arms. Face shields and goggles furnish protection for the face and eyes from splashing injurious chemicals.

Wearing proper clothing is largely an obligation of the individual. Special conditions require extraordinary protective clothing, and these are available where needed. It will be to your own advantage to wear safe and sensible clothing on the job and to make use of the special protective equipment provided in certain work areas.
