

Golden Age club members gather for annual Christmas party.

With Holiday Events

Christmas window filled with Fieldcrest products; the Tri-City high school carillon and church chimes playing Christmas melodies, traditional Christmas songs over radio and television; the red glow of bulbs and the glistening of ornaments on Christmas trees; home decorations seen through windows, around doorways and on front lawns.

To arrive almost too soon will be Christmas Eve with its climactic events amid an overhanging feeling of expectation . . . the cheery good will among the throngs of late shoppers . . . students and service men coming home, families getting together, gatherings of friends; an occasional burst of fireworks despite the ban . . . then evening, and church services with pageants depicting the Nativity, followed by brown bagged "treats" for the Sunday School . . . carollers outside the window, the strains of "The First Noel" carried on the night air; Mom and Dad keeping a late rendezvous with a jolly fellow in a red suit . . . a few hours' sleep.

It's Christmas morning! The children waken early and rush barefoot to the tree. The smallest clasps a prized toy and looks up with rapturous face. Mom and Dad in bathrobes watch happily with a twinge of sadness that children must grow up.

Joy to the World! Peace and Good Will, springing from this most meaningful of holidays. May its true Spirit abide with us always.

Merry Christmas!

Below, left, Exchange club gives party for crippled children. Right, large crowd watches show at Council's Christmas party.

Atop Fieldcrest float in Tri-City Christmas parade are Faye Flinchum, Peggy Ziglar, Gail Tranbarger, Brenda Curry.

Ellis Stone department store in Greensboro dressed a pretty Christmas window displaying Fieldcrest products.

