Retirement Can Be Happiest Years In Life

If a man has a hobby and maintains a lively interest in life, his chance of enjoying unusual longevity are good after he quits work for good. The years of his retirement may be the happiest of his life.

Take Izaak Walton, a London business man, who retired at the age of 50. He lived to be 90 and enjoyed 40 years of leisure.

As you know, Walton's hobby was fishing. He was also fond of writing.

The first edition of his classic, "The Compleat Angler," was published when he was 60. He wrote a fifth edition at 83.—Selected.

Optimist—A guy who thinks he is holding his youth because he can carry five dollars worth of groceries easier than he did fifteen years ago.

For delivering news, the female has been found more dependable than the mail.
