

Woman's College Group Visits Karastan

Top: Students from Woman's College on visit to Karastan Rug Mill take notes as they observe the work of designers Valeria Camp (left) and Audrey Ingram.

Right: In Weave Room, group watches the operation of Loom 42. At right is James C. Smith, weaver; in center is W. J. Garrett, of Finishing Department, guide for the visitors; second from left is Miss Elizabeth Hathaway, faculty member who accompanied the students.

Left: In Finishing Department, students watch with interest while Vivia Turner carves rug. At extreme left is Joe Connolly, trainee, the guide for the group.

A group of 25 students from Woman's College, Greensboro—juniors and seniors majoring in interior design in the School of Home Economics—were recent visitors at the Karastan Rug Mill.

Miss Elizabeth Hathaway, associate professor of housing and management, made arrangements for the visit and accompanied the students here.

They visited the Showroom and Designing Department and then were given guided tours throughout the mill.

The students are enrolled in a course which includes field trips to plants producing home furnishings. The purpose of the course is to acquaint the students with the manufacturing processes and problems involved in creating, manufacturing, and marketing a design.

The seniors in the group next year will be working in the field of home furnishings, some of them in the home furnishings departments of large stores, as junior decorators and in related jobs.