200 Blood Donors Needed This Week

Fieldcrest employees will have a prominent part in the visit of the Bloodmobile to the Leaksville Moose Hall on Forbes Street Thursday, August 5, with a goal of 200 pints.

Fieldcrest Mills will conduct its own recruitment campaign in its Leaksville plants. Every employee of the Bedspread and Karastan Mills will be contacted and asked to give a pint of blood. Giles Hunnings, mill superintendent, and Jones Norman, industrial relations representative, will be recruitment chairmen for the two mills, respectively.

Raymond Martin, Leaksville recruitment chairman, will lead the campaign for donors outside the Bedspread and Karastan Mills. He will be assisted by Glenn Simpson, Leaksville fire chief, who will recruit donors from among city employees and from business places.

John G. Cunningham, co-chairman of the Tri-City Blood program, in making an urgent appeal for donors, points out that the actual usage of blood for Tri-City people averages from 90 to 100 pints each month and therefore, a minimum of 200 pints is needed to take care of the months of July and August.

"The 200 pints will barely meet the community's needs until the time of the Bloodmobile visit in September and will do little toward reducing the Tri-Cities' long-standing deficit in blood donations," Mr. Cunningham explains.

He reports that for the 12 months ending June 30, the Tri-Cities used 1,077 pints of blood. During the same period, only 1,018 pints were donated, leaving the community in arrears by 59 pints for the most recent fiscal year.

The records show that in the past four years 3,694 pints of blood have been received by Tri-City people while only 3,527 pints have been donated here. In only one year out of the four (1963-64) did the community contribute as much blood as was received.

"We have a cumulative deficit of 167 pints for the four years," Mr. Cunningham (Continued on Page Three)
