

Clarence Haymore, of Sheet Finishing Mill, demonstrates use and limitations of a carbon dioxide fire extinguisher.

John Steagall, of the Blanket Mill, shows "knock-down" and extinguishing power of a dry powder fire extinguisher.

Mill Fire Brigades Are Given Training

Sixty-three members of mill fire brigades at Fieldcrest's Eden plants participated in a fire extinguisher demonstration recently at the demonstration ground adjacent to the Eden filtration plant.

The use of carbon dioxide extinguishers and their limitations in fighting a large, flammable liquid fire were demonstrated, followed by a demonstration showing the effectiveness of the "knock-down" and extinguishing power of a dry powder extinguisher on the same type of fire.

Also demonstrated were the adjustments and the effectiveness of a fog nozzle for a 2½" hose and the operation and the effectiveness of a cellar nozzle.

The extinguisher demonstrations, conducted each year during Fire Prevention Week, include a review of fire fighting techniques and equipment. The sessions are a part of the over-all training of the fire brigades who are responsible for fighting fires that occur at the mills, backed up of course by the fire departments in the community.

G. H. Simpson, chief of Fire Company No. 1, explains operation of fog nozzle.
