

Greenville Waste Reduction Program Getting Good Results

The 1969 Program of Waste Reduction and Follow-Up is well under way at the Karastan Spinning Mill, Greenville. The thoroughgoing program was launched January 1 and the results through week ending February 9 show all departments exceeding their waste reduction percentage goal.

The Karastan Spinning Mill has done a very good job of waste reduction for a number of years. Tremendous progress was made prior to 1966, particularly during the early 1960's through the institution of formal programs for controlling waste.

To further reduce losses from waste the mills began this latest intensified campaign in order to create interest and solicit the assistance of all employees. Meetings have been held down the line, including a meeting of assistant foremen with the employees on their respective shifts.

A daily follow-up of waste control is conducted and employees are informed as improvements are made. Employees are invited to make suggestions and copies of the suggestions are posted in each department.

Recognition in The Mill Whistle and otherwise is to be given employees who make suggestions that greatly improve waste conditions or eliminate the condition.

An over-all waste committee composed of three supervisors and a representative of the Industrial Engineering Department will continue to make monthly waste inspections. The inspections will emphasize items discussed in the earlier group meetings and posted in the departments.

A similar waste reduction program has been set up at the Winchester Spinning Corporation, a Fieldcrest subsidiary at Asheville.
