Many View Fieldcrest Exhibits

The displays pictured here were designed to project the story of Fieldcrest to the public.

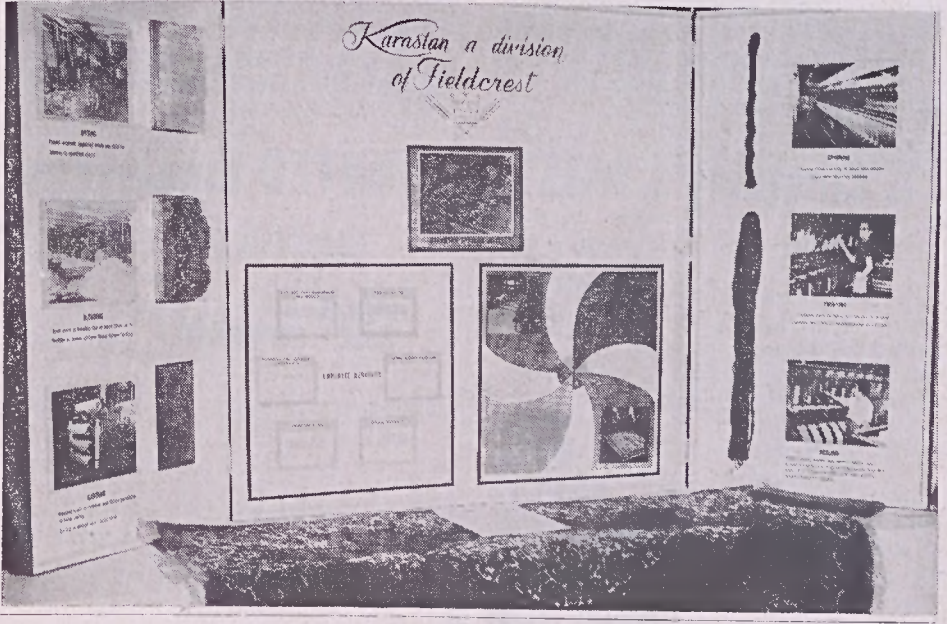

The top picture is an exhibit which the Columbus Towel Mill, Columbus, Ga., erected at the Columbus Square Shopping Mall for Industry Appreciation Days, sponsored by the Merchant's Association. Eight other textile firms, along with other area firms, also had displays at the exhibit.

The display below was made by the Karastan Spinning Mill in Greenville for a Pitt County Industrial Exhibit, sponsored by the Pitt County Schools. About 43 companies participated in the two-day exhibit.

Karastan Spinning donated the exhibit to the school system to be sent around to all schools to acquaint the children with industry and with Fieldcrest's local plant.

Both exhibits drew large crowds. An estimated 2,000 persons saw the Greenville display; the number viewing the Columbus exhibit could not be determined with it being located in a crowded shopping mall.

and Mrs. Andrews made their home, called "Tulip Hill," into a showplace with thousands of flowers.

Mr. Andrews became a leading flower grower and won literally hundreds of prizes at state fairs and in other competitions. He was a leader in projects to beautify Decatur and developed a rose named "Illinois" in honor of the state's sesquicentennial.

He recently was honored by the Decatur Rose Society on the group's 10th anniversary and was presented a life membership in the society in recognition of his many contributions to the cause of roses in Decatur.
