Cornell Students Visit Karastan

The Karastan Mill was host to a group of seniors and graduate students from the Department of Design and Environmental Analysis at Cornell University, Ithica, N.Y.

The visit was in the form of a field trip during a semester break for a class dealing with various aspects of the textile and apparel industries. The group was headed by Professor Nancy Conklin Saltford.

At Karastan the visitors heard talks by Jones W. Norman, area personnel manager, and Jerry Jones, designer. They spent most of their time in the showroom and the Designing Department. They then were given a guided tour of the manufacturing areas.

Following the visit, Professor

Saltford wrote to Mr. Norman follows: "Again this year Karastan Mill was a highlight of our textile visit to the mill. Jerry Jones did an excellent job of describing the design process as it relates to the production of Karastan rugs. We enjoyed your presentation, our tour of the mill, and the discussion you regarding more current issues current in the industry."

Clyde Brown is a man who has many interests and many hobbies. In addition to geology, Indian artifacts, botany, etching and archaeology, he also avidly reads the little fillers in newspapers and periodicals and admits that he has accumulated more useless information than anyone he knows.

An elevator operator in the Packing Department at the Fieldale Towel Mill, Mr. Brown is more widely known for his rock collection than anything else. He has been collecting minerals, rocks and fossils for some years and frequently speaks on these subjects at schools in the Fieldale area.

Once he gets interested in a subject, Mr. Brown says he reads everything about it that he can find. His room at the Virginia Boarding House where he lives is lined with wall-to-wall books and they range from works on wildflowers to
