

Five Generations

Completes 50 Years Textile Companies Give To Education

I've had several chances to work somewhere else but I just stayed here. If I hadn't enjoyed it, I wouldn't have stayed.

"The kind of people you work with makes a lot of difference. I've always had nice people to work with on every job I ever had."

He is a member of Spray Baptist Church and formerly was a member of some local civic groups. He enjoys watching all sports on television and frequently travels to games or wrestling matches.

He is married to the former Neva Land of Eden who worked at the old Automatic Blanket Mill and the old Synthetic Fabrics Mill. They have a son, Sammy, of Eden, and a daughter, Mrs. R. E. New, Jr. of Virginia Beach, Va., and three grandchildren. The Hankinses live at 608 Early Avenue in Eden.

Five Months Old

Corporations in the textile and apparel industries led all others in the percentage of their pre-tax net income contributed to higher education in 1974, according to a report issued by the Council for Financial Aid to Education.

The report said some 19 companies gave $2.5 million to colleges and universities. The comparatively high percentage is accounted for, the report said, by the fact that profits in the industry declined in 1974, but the companies did not reduce their contributions accordingly.

Overall, business and industry contributed an all-time high of $445 million to support higher education in 1974.

Two Years Old

Shermale Yvette Hardin celebrated her second birthday March 23. Her mother, Mary J. Hardin, is employed in the Weave Room at the Draper Sheeting Mill.

Boyd Children

Christopher Marc Boyd, seven years old, and Candace Lanette Boyd, six years old, are the children of Charlotte B. Atkinson, a channel scheduling clerk in the Blanket Finishing Mill Office. Their stepfather, William L. Atkinson, is employed at Southern National Bank.

US Individual Taxpayers Ask IRS

Q. Because of an injury, I missed 40 days of work. The sick pay I received during this time equalled my normal weekly pay. Can I exclude this sick pay from my income?

A. Generally, whether sick pay may be excluded from income depends on the rate of the sick pay for the first 30 days of absence. In a case like yours, in which sick pay is more than 75 percent of normal weekly pay, you must be out of work at least 30 days to exclude any sick pay from your income. So your 40-day absence qualifies you to exclude the sick pay received after the first 30 days.

When the sick pay is less than or equal to 75 percent of normal pay, the sick pay is excludable from the first day if you are hospitalized, and after seven days if not hospitalized.

For more information on sick pay deductions, see IRS Publication 522, "Adjustments To Income For Sick Pay."

Q. My wife and I have a joint savings account. How do we divide the interest for taxes?

A. If two or more persons hold savings accounts, bonds or other interest-producing investments jointly, local law determines what share of the interest each receives. You and your wife should report your respective shares of interest in the same way you report other income.

Q. My employer insists I have to report my tips to him, but I work only part time and average only $15 a week in tips. Do I still have to report my tips?

A. Yes. The tax law requires that individuals who receive tips totaling $20 or more in a month from working for any one employer must report the tips.
