Nursing Stations: Better Health Care For Employees

Fieldcrest's newest nursing station, located at the Karastan Worsted Plant to serve employees at both that plant and the Karastan Spinning Mill at Greenville, is now operational.

Another nursing station was recently opened at the North Carolina Finishing Company at Salisbury. Full-time stations were already in operation at the Fieldale Towel Mill, Columbus Towel Mill, and Swift Spinning Mill.

"These nursing stations in our outlying locations not only enable us to provide better health care for our employees, but also help to speed up the pre-employment and re-employment physical examination processes," said Dr. Charles G. Young, Fieldcrest medical director.

The nurses at these stations also have responsibility for first aid training and equipment and the various immunization programs offered to employees.

"This frees Central Medical Department personnel for other projects involving increasingly comprehensive health care for Fieldcrest employees," Dr. Young said.

By having professional medical personnel at plant locations, minor ailments and on-the-job injuries may be more promptly and efficiently treated, he said.

Also, early recognition of symptoms which could be forerunners of acute or chronic diseases is an important part of preventive health care for employees, Dr. Young continued.

"Our nurses are trained to recognize these symptoms and by seeing employees more often than an outside physician would they are in a position to observe such symptoms early," he said.

Fieldcrest's two newest nurses are Gail S. Tucker, RN, who will operate the nursing station at Greenville; and Rosemarie Scherer, RN, at North Carolina Finishing Company.

Mrs. Tucker, a graduate of Park View Hospital in Rock Mount, is a native of Pitt County and now lives in Winterville.

Mrs. Scherer received her nursing degree from D'Youville College in Buffalo, N.Y. A native of Buffalo, she teaches nursing at Davidson Community College in addition to her duties at NCF.

Full-time nurses at the outlying locations are Ann Breeden, RN, Columbus Towel Mill; Judy Foley, RN, Fieldale Towel Mill; and Helen Butler, RN, Swift Spinning Mill.

Each nursing station has an examination room similar to this one at North Carolina Finishing.

Keeping comprehensive medical records is an important part of the occupational health nursing duties. Here, Rosemarie Scherer at the North Carolina Finishing Company catches up on her record keeping.

The grants are also made to employees' children attending four-year colleges or universities.

The grants-in-aid are distinct from the Fieldcrest Scholarships, also awarded by the Foundation. Grants may be used at technical or trade schools and are given on an annual basis with the student re-applying each year.

The Scholarships are given for four years provided the student maintains a satisfactory grade average. The recipient must attend a four-year college or university in pursuit of an academic degree.
