Ann Arnold

She Uses Shredded Paper To Teach Art In Schools

Ann Arnold has taken a waste product from one of the Fieldcrest's plants and used it to teach fourth, fifth and sixth grade Eden students an ancient art form.

Mrs. Arnold, who teaches art in the Eden Elementary Schools, used shredded paper from the Bedsread Mill to teach children the art of quilling.

Quilling which was developed in the Middle Ages to decorate the altars of churches involves rolling and folding small strips of paper or other materials into designs which resemble filigree. The designs can be attached to a background or hung for decoration.

Material for quilling can be purchased in craft shops, but Mrs. Arnold saw some of the shredded paper and got the idea of using it in her classes.

"It worked just beautifully," she said. "Many of the children made Christmas tree ornaments and they were lovely."

Mrs. Arnold is the wife of David T. Arnold, plant manager at the Bedsread Greige Mill.

Tax Changes

retirement income or not.

The maximum credit has been increased for single taxpayers 65 or over to 15 percent of $2,500 and to 15 percent of $3,750 for couples filing jointly where both spouses are 65 and over.

The Sick Pay Exclusion has been replaced by a maximum annual exclusion of up to $5,200 a year for persons under 65 who have retired on disability because they are permanently and totally disabled. The maximum exclusion is reduced, dollar for dollar, by the amount the taxpayer's adjusted gross income exceeds $15,000.

The minimum standard deduction, or low-income allowance, has been increased. For single taxpayers, it is $1,700; for couples filing jointly, $2,100. The standard deduction remains at 16 percent.

Maximum standard deductions have been increased to $2,400 for single taxpayers, $2,800 for married persons filing jointly or qualifying widows or widowers, and $1,400 for married persons filing separately.

Since many of the changes in the tax law can become somewhat complicated, employees are urged to take advantage of the assistance from the Internal Revenue Service which is available by telephone or a visit to the IRS office.
