

Rosetta Lollar was born near Lawson, Missouri on September 24, 1913 and is the daughter of James B. Lollar, a farmer in that state. She laughingly admits that she is the product of a one-room school-house from which she entered high school, graduating in 1931.

After graduation, she found a position in Saint Joseph, Missouri, working for the Western Tablet and Stationery Company, and during her five year's stay in that city, she acted as assistant director of Religious Education at the Second Presbyterian Church of Saint Joseph. She was also active in Christian Endeavor work, both in the city and in the surrounding district.

In order to reach Montreat from her home, Rosetta passed through Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, and North Carolina, covering six of our forty-eight states, and upon returning to school this year, she had the opportunity of traveling over part of the famous Santa Fe Trail.

This past Christmas she traveled a bit in Georgia, attending the Youth's Convention in Atlanta, and seeing a number of sites of historical interest. Among these were the famous Stone Mountain, the town of Jefferson where either was first discovered, the spot upon which Sidney Lanier wrote "The Song of the Chattahoochee", and the Cyclorama, painting of the Civil war battle of Atlanta.

Since her first days in Montreat, she has devoted herself enthusiastically to the Y.P.C. work, and she was elected president of this organization for the 1937-38 term. Because of her efficiency, good will, and her friendly spirit toward all, she has found as permanent a place in Montreat College as in the hearts of her many friends.--

A. W.

Montreat definition: Rubbers are things that if your feet are dry you haven't walked through the snow without.

The student body is happy to welcome two new students who have recently entered school. They are Christine Leverette of Asheville, N. C. and Joan Clyatt of Salt Lake, Fla.

Mrs. T.C. Pegram of Cullowhee, N.C. visited her daughter, Betty, on Tuesday, January 11.

Doris Hodges and Thelma Hinkle spent the week-end of January 22 at their respective homes in Asheville.

Bette Elmore and Willie Mae Reeves spent a few days during exam week with Helen Stone in Swannanoa.

Peggy Hill and Belle Brown have moved from their former residence in Room 102 to Room 58. This room was formerly occupied by Evelyn Morrison and Edna Brailsford who have moved to the Fellowship Building for the remainder of the year.

Bette Brown attended the Phi Kappa Sigma houseparty at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C. the week-end of January 28.

Jennie Hutton attended the mid-winter dances at the University of Tennessee January 29 to February 2.

Joyce Juniper and Haseltine Swift spent the week-end of January 22 with Haseltine's parents in Waynesville, N.C.

Mildred Shore, a former day student from Swannanoa, has moved into the Fellowship Building.

Helen Knoblock was entertained at a surprise dinner party at Assembly Inn on her birthday on January 21. Those present were Virginia Douglas, Mildred Shore, Pat Piatt, Ann Hope Pyles, Jaque Hubbard, Martha Ann Smith, Dot Manning, Priscilla Noyes, and Joan Clyatt.

A large number of students motored to Asheville Monday night, January 31, to hear the National Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Hans Kindler.

Miss Miles: Give me an example of period furniture.

H. Swift: An electric chair, because it ends a sentence.