Effective Self-Medication

SAVING MONEY AND MEDICS
According to government statistics Americans spent only three percent of their health care dollar on non-prescription medicines in 1979.

Nonprescription medicines can be effective and economical in relieving the symptoms of many minor illnesses. For example, James Cope, president of The Proprietary Association—the trade association representing the manufacturers of nonprescription medicines—points out that most people can usually get rid of a headache at a cost of three to five cents.
