THEN & NOW!

THEN: Back in Biblical times, messengers were often blamed for bringing bad news.

NOW: We learn about the bad news of rising food prices in the supermarket and mistakenly blame the grocer.

Dating back to ancient times is the legend of the messenger who was punished for bringing back bad news. Rulers such as Ivan the Terrible and Genghis Khan are among those who dealt out severe punishment to carriers of bad tidings.

Today, we learn about rising and falling food prices in the supermarket. When the news is bad we often blame the grocer. In fact, grocers have little control over shifting food prices. Usually, they are just the messengers.

As is often the case, there is a combination of causes for rising food prices.

Bad weather at home and increased international demand have decreased the food supply in this country. General inflation has forced up the cost of processing, transporting and distributing food. When food supplies are low and inflation boosts handling costs, grocery prices tend to rise. There is some encouraging news, though. Even during bad times there will be downward movements to be able to offer us better buys. They suggest that we watch newspaper ads for opportunities to stock up and save. Tasty advice, indeed, for consumers hungry for a good food buy.
