DOLLAR-SAVING TIPS

Good news for travelers who don't care to pay $40 or more for a motel room. Low-cost tourist homes are making a comeback. You'll sleep as comfortably at a fraction of the cost.

An annual guide to tourist homes is published by Tourist House Associates, P.O. Box 355A, Greentown, Pa. 18426. It costs $2.50.

If you're interested in turning your own home into a tourist house, you can have your accommodations listed in the next issue for $10.

There's a new kind of food package on the market, called retortable pouches. The pouch is made of plastic and aluminum, and all you do is drop it in boiling water.

They're good enough for the Pentagon, which is using the pouches instead of C rations. They should be cheaper than canned or frozen foods, since they're cheaper to package, ship or store, and take up less shelf space.

A person in Boston, a consumer activist, had a three-pound parcel that he wanted to airmail to England. He decided to do a little comparison shopping, and so took the package to several post offices for an estimate of the cost. He found that mailing would cost from $2.93 to $11.94, depending on the post office. Officials were naturally a bit upset but had no answer for the fantastic differences in rates except to blame faulty scales and poorly trained clerks.

Next time you mail a package make sure the clerk doesn't have his thumb on the scale.
