HOW TO BE A ROOKIE

(Written Expressly for Adam Rookie.)

The rookies are always with us. A member of that family named Adam has called upon us for advice. Since the military life is so radically different from civil life, we have prepared a series of rules and regulations for their safe guidance.

"The impression you make the first day in camp will largely determine the success of your future military career. Endavor to make a hit with all the boys and particularly the officers.

"Try to amuse the officers by telling them funny stories and dancing for them in front of their quarters. Let them know that you are a good fellow by calling them 'Comrade,' and never overlook an opportunity to buy them a drink.

"Spend most of your spare time in the Captain's office telling him of your qualifications, he will be glad to hear them. Make him think you are interested in the military game by asking him many questions. Tell him that your pand ma wanted you to enlist as an officer; maybe he will help you out— of the room.

"Always maintain the greatest confidence in yourself, and never feel restrained to make the acquaintance of the highest officials. If you see the colonel and some majors talking together, step right up and introduce yourself. It is a mark of distinction and valour for not many of the boys have courage enough to do that—not even the sergeants.

"During the first day in camp, you will have to sign a qualification record or personnel card. Then the officer in charge asks you if you have had any previous experience in drilling; tell him that you have drilled corn for several years. This will amuse him and he will think that you are particularly bright. Make him think that you are a very talented man; when he asks you if you have been a blacksmith or bacteriologist, tell him you are well versed in both. If he gets inquisitive and probes into your family affairs by asking if you are married, tell him it is none of his business; use a little profanity on him and he will shut up. However you must be tactful in cursing the officers for they might write home and tell your parents.

"At mess, slip in through the kitchen and ask the boys to fill up your mess kit back there. They are always glad to do special favors, and besides, it is much easier for you than to stand in line for your mess. If they have anything that you do not like take it back and dump it in the kettle—don't waste it. Don't tip the waiter, he is only a dining room orderly and is there for your special service. If you spill anything on the floor, you will find what he is there for. Ask him to get you some extra sugar for your coffee; he will be glad to accommodate you and will probably tell you so. PRIVATE ARTHUR FAY.

THAT NEW RULE.

Private Oswald—"Get me a corporal so I can talk to Sergeant Goldstein."
