nity of speaking to you this morning I would like to try to begin the new year right. We have done splendidly so far, and I believe every boy and girl is going to make this a useful and happy year."

On he talked. Madelyne felt as if he was talking directly to her. Especially so when he mentioned resolutions.

"In making our resolutions for the year," he said, "don't forget to mention cheerfulness. Nothing can be one more than being cheerful and happy."

Madelyne felt her face turn suddenly so hot that she knew it must be awfully red, and she knew that Mr.
Sears was staring at her.

She was glad when Miss Little played the march for them to return to their classes.

Madelyne couldn't banish the talk of Mr. Sears from her mind.

"Why didn't he simply call me to his office and tell me there," she grumbled, "instead of calling the whole school, for I'm sure he meant every word for me"

Why is it that on tests teachers have such a clear understanding of what we don't know?
