EXAMINATIONS

There are seasons of the year which awaken in us a sense of days gone by. There are two periods which bring to us practically the same thoughts. Last week was one of these. The other will come, alas, too soon. Exams, both mid-year and final, remind us of the last time we failed.

Some students were fussing about where their nickels went. Even though they used about four large mimeographed sheets they couldn't see it that way, since they had to write some on their own paper. Anyway, we can't blame them for wanting to sing "That's where my money goes."

Exams give most people a pain, and I'm not unusual in that respect. Just imagine—having to sit in one desk for an hour (I never stay any longer, how about you?), when you're accustomed to being there only fifty minutes.

But now (I breathe a deep sigh) exams are over and we may start over again. Shall it be on Mr. Patrick's train or on the later one? Personally, I prefer the latter. I do not consider him as good an engineer as he might be. According to my beliefs, the train will be in a worse condition when he gets through with it than the later one. Besides, I prefer companionship, and I sadly fear that most of my old cronies will be slightly late.

Of course there are exceptions—there always are. I'm a pessimist and I'm not by myself. Personally I consider an optimist the greatest pest on earth. Some people come early enough to get on the first train but I shall doubtless be too late for the last. Ach! Himmell! What shall happen then? There Mr. Patrick. "Unravel that one?"

Either THE POINTER or the band have gotten slightly mixed up in dates. They must be trying to give January credit for all the days that February has lost by giving it 87. And another thing—our present calendar the twenty-seventh comes on Sunday instead of on Monday.

SHO KAY

If some of the teachers get to making wise cracks during the next few days, you can just mark it down that they got 'em off some poor guy's paper that got thirty or less. It looks like the guys ought to get something for saying things that even the teachers hadn't thought of saying before.

LOCAL JOURNALISTS TO HAVE CHAPTER OF NATIONAL 'QUILL & SCROLL' quality of work, as judged by the standard of the high school in question, must be well above the average of all the students in the high school. Journalistic work included all types of creative work; it includes the editing and business management of publications and drawing and writing for publications.

To comply with provision (5) the supervisor is requested to submit a record of each student who is a candidate for membership on the blanks provided for that purpose. This record includes a statement of the nature and quality of the work performed by the candidate and of his fitness for membership in The National Honorary Society for High School Journalists.

A review of these requirements shows that membership in the society is not gained easily, but only after hard and consistent work in the field of journalism. Each member is given a gold Quill and Scroll badge. Initiations may be held at any time during the year.

The local society may be an active one or merely an honorary one. This will be decided later. In the meantime the members of the staff are working hard so that if a chapter is organized here they may be able to join.

publications for the fee of $3.50. Delegates from the staffs of prize-winning newspapers and magazines are to be appointed early in the convention to edit a special convention number of "The Speculator," Columbia's daily newspaper.

Round table discussions will be held for the benefit of the students and faculty advisers who wish the ideas of others about the perplexing problems which confront their own newspapers.

Many schools who have unusual features in their publications are making charts. These will be sent to the convention and will be on exhibit there.

Since the railroad fare is the principal expense, a reduction has been secured for all delegates. This reduction amounts to 25 per cent of the round trip rate from the point of departure to New York and return to the original point of departure by the same route.

THE WILL TO WIN

Is a major factor for business success that ranks in importance with ability and training . . . but good quality and service in our line is no less essential. Snow Lumber Company has enjoyed a reputation for such service since 1880 and continues to grow because of it.
