

Elizabeth Seckler: Katherine, did you hear how loud I was singing this morning at home room period?

Katherine Gentry: No, I couldn't hear you for myself.

Marguerite Neave: Katherine, why was the Statue of Liberty's hand made 11 inches long?

Katherine Hayworth: I don't know.

Marguerite Neave: Well, if they had made it another inch long, it would have been a foot.

Nellie Beck said that her daddy wanted a boy to deliver crabs that could ride a bicycle.

She: I hate your kisses.

He: Well, who don't you give them back?

She: Did I ever show you the place where I hurt my hip?

He: N-n-n-o.

She: Well, hop in the car and we'll go there.

Some gink once had a brilliant idea about browsing around in a library with the ghosts of literature and all that, but somehow the idea does not appeal to me. "The Haunted Bookshop," for instance, was a place reeking with stale tobacco smoke. Now, it's my opinion that if there had been any ghosts there you couldn't have seen their writhing figures for the denseness of the smoke.

Ghosts don't appeal to me any way. I like to read stories about them, but I doubt if I would welcome with very much alacrity the chance of shaking hands with one, especially with some of the characters in fiction. I said something about Baron Munchausen last week, but that is one old bird off whose head I would like to bounce two or three encyclopedias not to mention several dictionaries. He'd take you off in one corner and tell you a lot of his precious lies, and, believe me, when that old fossil gets started he can gab worse than Will Rogers.

Then there is Mr. Shakespeare. Several people have called him one of "the great," but to me he is nothing but a lot of vodka. He might seem romantic to someone who has had to read about Henry 5th only in history, but when you start something like that in school—well, you are liable to change your mind.

However, there are other characters. Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn used to excite me, but now it's about like Santa Clause.

One of the most interesting figures in history is Mephistopheles. If he hadn't come along we maybe wouldn't have been here now. Mr. "Phles" climbs an apple tree, for instance, and samples the fruit. Then he goes to Mrs. Adam and tells her about it. She goes to the tree and takes a dainty little feminine bite. Up comes her better half and takes a huge masculine bite. Just as they are gulping it down they see something which surprises them. They naturally can't swallow. There you have the whole history of the Adams apple.

Lucifer too is one of those (hot papas) of literature, but for the time being we will leave him to you imagination, and to Mr. Owens's senior English class.

Mr. Cicero and Mr. Ceazer (the sots) might be interesting too, if you could read anything they wrote. Imagine seeing a figure wrapped up in a sheet, firing a volley of language that died with him. Deliver me. The modern idea would be that some one was walking in his sleep and had grabbed the bed clothes for a mantle by mistake.

If I'm to be a librarian I would have to have light and a plenty of it.

its work as an aid to librarians and booksellers.

A large line of interesting books and periodicals from various sources may be inspected and new books in the field will be added from time to time as they appear. Illustrative of these incidental events are: "The Public Affairs Information Service," "The Leaders' Digest," publications of the F. W. Faxon Company and "The Dictionary of American Biography."

The organization of the National Association of Book Publishers is twenty-eight years old, and has a membership of eight hundred persons. Its membership includes the leading publishers of America, although the lack of space alone is responsible for the absence of some of the leading firms.

and the Central High school of Greensboro. This debate will be held soon after the triangle battle. In this each negative team will visit the opponents' affirmative on the latter's own rostrum.

The speakers chosen for this debate are Ralto Farlow, Eloise Best, Mayna Allen, and Mabel Koontz. These speakers have had experience in debating also. Ralto Farlow is a member of the oratio club; Eloise Best, a member of the National Honor Society, was in the triangular debate last year; Mayna Allen, a member of the National Honor Society also, is a member of the oratio club; Mabel Koontz, although a freshman, is a very effective speaker.

This debate has for its query: "Resolved, That the United States Should Cancel the Allied War Debts."

Much more interest is being taken this year in debating than has been shown ever before. Mr. Andrews, local adviser of the oratio club and the debate coach, has made a request for a chapter of the National Forensic League for this school. This organization takes into its membership members

LIBRARY REPORT FOR FEBRUARY IS GOOD

According to the library report for the month of February, the library has been living up to the standards for the preceding months of the year. The report for February follows:

Total circulation	3,636
Largest daily issue	233
Average daily issue	182
Reference questions answered	608
Extension help given	1
Books added	11
Books mended	62
Visitors	60

The librarians are much pleased with the report for the month, as it tallies very favorably with the others. A feature of this month's record is the extraordinary number of visitors recorded.
