

Miss Clinard—Did the slaves play a very large part in the Civil War?

Kerney Smith—Not much. They just cooked.

Charlie Kearns—I'd call that the most important of all.

Sassiety Notes

Fred Thomas, Charlie Kearns and Jesse Stone "took in" the carnival last Wednesday night. We hear that these three high school shieks created quite a commotion among the feminine contingent of the "show folks." From current reports, the lady lion tamer was quite taken with a pair of soft brown eyes, and the snake charmer thought Jesse's fair complexion and blond hair ideal, while all the Hawaiian dancers were charmed by the gentle manners of the third member of the party.

Misses Dot Willis and Virginia Hunt spent Saturday morning in Thomasville shopping.

Mr. M. L. Patrick was a visitor at Guilford College during the week-end.

Mr. Alston says every time he goes to ride in his new car the wind starts blowing.

Heard somebody talking about May Eve yesterday. Wonder if she's any kin to Norwood.

Eustace Smoak wants to know from which direction a nightingale blows.

OHIO AND IOWA BOYS ARE WINNERS IN NATIONAL JOURNALISTIC CONTEST

Results of Quill and Scroll Feature Writing Competition Announced This Month.

Gibson Dildine, Central High School, Lima, Ohio, was the winner of the feature and advertisement contest conducted recently all over the United States by the Quill and Scroll Society. An announcement to this effect was made in the society's May magazine. Bob Pritchard, a student at East High School, Waterloo, Iowa, was the winner of the second place. Both of these were awarded their honors in the feature half of the contest, the advertising contest being a distinctly separate section. Phebe Carrick of Tulsa, Oklahoma, and Royce Birr, Two Rivers, Wisconsin, were awarded first and second places respectively for the advertisements they submitted. The only winner from North Carolina was Louise Eford, of Albemarle High School, Albemarle, N. C., who wrote in the feature contest.

Two papers on the subjects prescribed by the officials of the contest were sent to headquarters from High Point high school. These were the works of Frances Douglas, and Mary Elizabeth Harlee, No local student was a contestant for the advertisement prizes.

The winning feature story by the Ohio pupil was in the nature of an interview. It is as follows:

"And now, Sir Herbert," timidly inquired the reporter, "what opinion are you prepared to express regarding the alleged rumor of an increase of Bolshevism in England?"

Sir Herbert placed his middle and index fingers one on each side of his nose, and meditated.

Three minutes later, he was still meditating.

The reporter twittered faintly.

"And now, Sir Herbert," he again ventured cautiously, "what sentiments do you entertain anent the alleged rumor concerning the reported increase of Bolshevism in England?"

"Eh? Oh!" spluttered Sir Herbert, opening and shutting his eyes several times, so that his eyeglass fell dangling on its ribbon. He was effusive with apologies. "So sorry you must leave so soon," he muttered through his mustache as he moved towards the door.

The reporter was desparate. He tried a new track.

"Has your opening on prohibition changed since your arrival in this country?"

Sir Herbert became conscious of this question before he reached the door. He turned and came back.

"Have you seen the view from the Woolworth Tower?" The reporter hurriedly changed his subject, perceiving Sir Herbert about to go into another trance.

"Rule Britannia!" shouted the great man in a voice that transcended the din of the traffic of the street below.

"Quite right," murmured the reporter taking a note. "Quite right."

Sir Herbert arose. Thumbs in his armpits, he faced the broad window overlooking Seventh Avenue. He stretched forth his hand in a broad sweep as though to take in the entire British Empire. The reporter wrote hurriedly. This was the famous Clapham gesture with which the great man always preceded an utterance of portentous moment.

He stood thus for fully a minute. The reporter held his pen poised. Finally Sir Herbert turned.

"I say, old fellow," he beamed, "tell me, in which of the music halls are Mr. Ziegfield's Follies playing?"
