GOOD RAINS AND FINE CROPS

The reports coming from practically all sections of Johnston County are to the effect that rains have been plentiful during the first part of this week and that crops of all kinds are flourishing. Generally speaking, there has been no serious drouth in this county this year, although there are sections where crops have suffered for lack of moisture. But in other counties near by we hear of serious damage to crops by dry weather. In talking to some parties from Wake and Wayne counties a few days ago they said that there were large sections in some crops would be almost a failure for want of rain this year as it is now too late for rain to sufficiently revive early crops to insure anything like a normal yield if rain should come in plenty.

The section in and around Selma has not suffered materially for lack of rain except garden vegetables and early corn, and these have greatly revived since rain came.

Sheriff Barber, whose old home is in the section near Benson, told us a few days ago that never in his recollection had he seen finer prospects for crops in that section.

We took a trip through Cleveland township not long ago and found the most promising outlook for good yields in that section of the county that the land in that section has produced in many a day.

Unless some unforeseen thing happens from now on, Johnston county will reap a bumper crop of corn, cotton and tobacco this year. Early tobacco began ripening prematurely, but since the copious rains have come it seems to be taking on new life and appears less ready of the barn each day.

THE CONSUMER ALWAYS PAYS

Our law-making bodies are becoming past masters in figuring out ways and means to dodge responsibility for increasing taxes which the public has to pay.

A legislative measure will be broadcast to the public as a tax reduction measure for the people, but pull aside the curtain and see what the real truth generally is.

The net result of most tax reduction measures is a shifting of taxes from one class of voters to another, hiding taxes under a new name, or the collection of more taxes through splitting up the levies in various smaller assessments.

The reason for constantly climbing net tax collections is obvious—thousands of new laws, a great percentage of which demand increased public payrolls and expenditures.

As an example of tax camouflage, take the Federal 3 per cent tax on electricity which was formerly added to the customer's electric bill. This was in line with special taxation such as the gasoline tax, the tax in bank checks, the Federal tax in automobiles, etc. Congress, to make some kind of a tax reduction showing for electric consumers, has shifted the 3 per cent electric tax from the user to the company. In other words, the 3 per cent must come out of the scant earnings of the investor.

This hides the tax from the general public, although it will still continue to pay the tax in one of three ways, namely: It must be deducted from the earnings of the millions of investors in the power industry, thereby reducing their previous income; or it will be reflected in increased rates to cover this tax; or it will prevent a reduction of rates which might otherwise have been secured.

Switching this tax from the electric user to the security holder is on a par with switching the gasoline tax from the buyer of gasoline to the oil company.

The politicians know that the electric company cannot add the 3 per cent tax to its bills unless it goes through the long process of securing a rate increase from each of the regulatory commissions in the various states. They also know that no such regulatory price restrictions apply to other sales taxes, such as on gasoline, where companies affected can add the tax immediately to the consumer's bill.
